Golf at Cog Hill No. 4 (Dubsdread)

Known as the "Patriarch of Public Golf," Joe Jemsek partnered with famed golf architects Dick Wilson and Joe Lee to create Joe's vision of a fourth course, one that would test the world's greatest golfers. Wilson/Lee complied and created what many consider to be each architect's best work. The collaboration was so successful that No. 4 has remained nationally ranked since its opening in 1964. True to its name, Dubsdread, this natural-style championship course places a high demand on shot-making ability by providing tight landing areas combined with heavily bunkered, large undulating greens.
